Intervention by This Country Alone

upon Mexico, in the opinion of A small show of armed umber of creat nations he is confident would bring tranquility to that long-dis-turbed republic neighbor on the south. Hatred of the people of the United States, fear of loss of territory to the United States, no happened in 1847, and skepticism regarding any declaration of altroistic motives that might actuate interference in Mexican affairs, Count Lorenzo de Bessa is confident would make intervention by the United States a bloody and terrible struggle. United action by the nations of Europe, with the United States co-operating, he does not consider would provoke any determined resistance nor be regarded with the same esistance nor be regarded with the same suspicion of purpose.

Thinks United States Jealous.

Count Lorenzo de Bessa does not entertain the hope that intervention will be He suspects the United States is jealous of its protectorship in the new world contends that it would be the best way. All the Mexican people are expecting intervention by the United States, he says, and are wondering why it has not already come to pass. While every indian—and the Indians make up the oulk of the population in the ratio of four in five—believes himself capable to account for the lives of from two to fifteen "gringess" in the event of war, President Huerta is proceeding, says Count de Bessa, to organize a civil guard for the prospective struight.

The citizens of Mexico City and elsewhere are being drilled by army officers, and estates. This civil guard is being clothed and hatted by contributions from the wealthy, whose patriotism is back of the spreparations for resistance. Not all educated Mexicans expect to win in a conflict with the United States, he says, but ignorant Mexico has no such doubt.

with the murder.

Penknife a Clue. The police hope to fix the responsibility for the crime today by determining the ewnership of a penkulfe which was found yesterday near the scene of the murder. The suife formerly was the property of Frank Dariment, who worked in a factory with Petras. The knife was lost three years ago, according to Darimont, who now lives in Chicago. Darimont, however, presented an alibi which the police densidered sufficient.

The police densidered sufficient.

The police today discovered a new witness whose testimony, they believe, will go for to prove that Petras is the man who heat her to death. Peter Fischbach, a fellow-student of Petras at night school, said Petras left the school saying he was going home, while as a matter of fact he went down fown. About he oclock Fischbach says see saw Petras standing idly in the censer of the business district.

Petras told him, Fischbach said, that he was going to catch a car, but when his car came along he did not board it. This was the car just before the one on which Petras and the Hollander girl went homeward. The police theory was that Petras waited to see what car Miss Hollander took, and they say Fischbach's story has confirmed their supposition. murder. The suife formerly was the
